Elegield and Goodwin Disagree About Riding-Grace George's Narrow Escape from Death.

Narrow Escape from Beath.

They got to talking about exercise and its relation to health, and Nat Goodwin remarked gravely that the bloom of youth upon his down; cheek was due intirely to a spirited gallop through the park every morning. This interested Florenz Ziegfried, who, although averse to early rising, concluded to try Nat's prescription just once any way. So as engagement was made then and there. The two were to meet at a rising-school early yesterday morning and sally forth on their health-seeking mission. Ziegfried in the latter of mission and also are some latter of the result of a complaint may be asked to serily rising, concluded to try Nat's prescription just once any way. So as engagement was made then and there. The two were to meet at a rising-school early yesterday morning and sally forth on their health-seeking mission. Ziegfried left calls in three languages at his hotel and gave particular instructions to get him out of bed at all hazards. The sun had not started far in its day's work yesterday when Ziegfried, a half hour behind time, darred breathleasly into the riding-school. To his great relief Goodwin hadn't arrived yet. Ziegfried evice the next half hour to preparing a carcatic speech on the subject of punctuality, but even after he had committed it to memory there was no Goodwin to hear it. Ziegfried then trotted off to Nat's house, where a sleepy-eyed servent assured him that the comedian had left the house an hour before. Back to the riding-school went Ziegfried them trotted off to Nat's house, where a sleepy-eyed servent assured him that the comedian had left the house an hour before. Back to the riding-school went Ziegfried the trough its convention of the trade below he was not before where will not shall have on the went of things taking dhe turn they have been endined to morning members to the serve at its section. Just what that trouble is cannot be ascertained, but in the stage hands and the electricians in years and the leading members to the process and the stage hands and he mounted a horse and scurried through te park, but saw nothing of the auburnhaired actor. Tired and hungry, the young manager returned to his hotel, hired a porter to rub him with liniment, and, before turning into bed again for a much-needed rest, he wrote a note to Goodwin. He was tempted to say lots, but contented himself with: "Dear Nat but contented himself with: "Des
